

School of Spiritual Science
Section for Agriculture

Agriculture Conference

3-6 February 2010 at the Goetheanum

Christian Impulses in Agriculture

Individual Development Themes for Humanity and the Earth

When we speak of Christianity in this context, we do not mean it in a specific religious sense. With Christianity we refer to something which is of a fundamentally human nature and not simply a belief system. It is one that concerns our active sense of responsibility towards humanity and the earth. The word 'Christian' is used to denote certain qualities that are historically associated with Christ such as love and compassion. This is of course also found within other faiths where Gods have different names. The theme will therefore be addressed by our speakers from differing cultural and religious vantage points during the conference. 'Inner transformation and inner connection' are concepts to indicate what we mean. With this conference we wish to penetrate to what motivates us each day in our agricultural (biodynamic) work on the earth.

What does the Earth need? The 'answer' might be found in the way we farm the land or in the attitude with which we carry out our work. The latter aspect has a more general ethical or even religious quality to it and yet is just as individual. Whether this inner searching can help us build an inclusive understanding amongst all who work for sustainability? We hope so and trust that with this conference a new step in this direction is made possible.

We invite you to participate with us in exploring this challenging theme!

For the representative group of the Agricultural Section,

Nikolai Fuchs, Stephan O. Mahlich

Details of conference, bookings and accommodation contact
Therese Jung sektion.landwirtschaft@goetheanum.ch